El Al still grounded, stewards set to vote

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

EN-GURION AIRPORT. — El l remained grounded yesterday, it all the airline's passengers, some ,300 people, were flown out on chartered planes to Europe, and a chartered jumbo jet will be taking off today for the U.S. with El Al passengers.

An El Al spokesman said yesterday that all the airline's passengers are being notified of the changes in heir flight schedules and so far the ssenger flow is normal.

l Al's management met last night discuss today's flight to Johari burg. The airline's striking ards announced that they are to interrupt their strike for light to South Africa, in the that this would better relations een the disputing sides and se of the importance of the e.

he El Al management announced at midnight last night that the stewards' offer came too late and was therefore impractical. The management expressed its regret hat in the stewards' general eeting yesterday they did not ecide to return to regular work. anagement believes that all flights e to be carried out, not only the pecial ones.

Concerning the trip to Johannesburg, the management has yet to decide whether to use a chartered plane or not to operate the flight at ll.

The cabin attendants (stewards nd pursars) met for over six hours esterday and decided to vote today on the Histadrut's suggestion to return to work and file court charges against the management for firing six stewards in violation of the work agreement.

Histadrut trade union chief Yisrael Kessar advised the stewards to return to work unconditionally, while negotiations begin between the workers and management. The Histadrut, in turn, will take legal action against management for firing the stewards.

But most of the cabin attendants are still demanding that management cancel the letters of dismissal as a pre-condition to returning to work. The secret vote on the Histadrut proposals will be held this morning at the air crews' headquarters here.

The cabin attendants, who refuse to board El Al planes due to the dismissal letters issued to several of them for not selling duty-free drinks and other items to passengers, say they are not on strike and are willing to return to work as soon as the dismissals are cancelled.

The stewards' works committee chairman, Jo Yehezkel, said that El Al manager Yitzhak Shander had promised them that if Sunday's three evening flights took off, management would cancel the dismissals. The three flights, to Bucharest, Athens and Cairo, which were due to leave between 7 and 8 p.m. Sunday, were delayed by the stewards, a number of whom were handed dismissal notices as soon as they landed on incoming flights that day.

But when the stewards agreed to let the three flights leave, somewhat after schedule, management refused to cancel the dismissals. As a result, the cabin attendants prevented Flight 001 taking off to New York that night.

Jemayel assassinated

By DAVID BERNSTEIN
Post Mideast Affairs Reporter and agencies

Lebanese President-elect Bashir Jemayel was reported dead last night from injuries sustained when a massive bomb blast tore through his Phalange party's headquarters in downtown Beirut yesterday afternoon.

UPI and AP, in late bulletins from Beirut last night, cited government sources for news of Jemayel's death.

All earlier reports had carried eyewitness and Phalange accounts, according to which Jemayel had survived the blast with no more than minor injuries.

Government sources were quoted as saying that Jemayel's body was taken to the Hotel Dieu hospital in the Ashrafiyeh section of East Beirut, the same neighbourhood where he died. Some sources said that the body was later taken to the Jemayel home in the mountain village of Bikfiyeh.

For more than an hour after his body was dug from under the debris, official Beirut Radio played funeral music without interruption.

The Voice of Free Lebanon radio, operated by Jemayel, made no mention of his death, but issued statements telling members of the Phalangist-led Lebanese Forces militia not to venture out in uniform or carry guns without specific orders.

The sources said President Elias Sarkis informed Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan of Jemayel's death in the bombing of the party office at 4 p.m. local time.

Jemayel's body was found in the rubble of the building in Ashrafiyeh's main Sassine Square several hours after the explosion, the sources said.

The radio of Jemayel's Phalange party went off the air with no explanation a few hours after the explosion. The state radio began playing a dirge for a few minutes about 11 p.m. local time and then switched to classical music.

Jemayel, 34, was elected to succeed outgoing President Elias Sarkis in a controversial poll last month, boycotted by most Moslem delegates, and was due to take office later this month.

He had pledged himself to work for national reconciliation in an independent Lebanon freed from all foreign forces, and is reported to have made some encouraging contacts in recent days with the country's Moslem leaders — including elder statesman and former prime minister Sa'eb Salam.

But yesterday's blast may well have dealt a severe blow to these first tentative moves towards national reconciliation.

There is also the very real danger the assassination could spark off a new round of violence in Lebanon, with Jemayel's Phalange-led Lebanese Forces now the dominant militia in the country, following the demise of the PLO and its leftist allies.

Jemayel was about to address a weekly political meeting attended by some 400 party members when the blast occurred, entirely demolishing the back of the three-storey stucco building in East Beirut's Ashrifiye quarter and damaging other buildings in the vicinity.

Phalange sources suggested that Jemayel's predictable routine — he apparently attended a meeting at party headquarters every Tuesday at 4 p.m., about the time yesterday's bomb went off — was probably a factor in the blast. Jemayel had escaped two previous assassination attempts. On March 20, 1979, a car bomb aimed at him was defused, and on February 23, 1980, a car bomb exploded as his limousine passed nearvy. He was not in the car, but his 18-month-old daughter, Maya, was killed.

Jemayel's brother, Amin, and father, Pierre, have survived attempts on their lives.

Police sources estimated last night that the bomb which destroyed the Phalange building packed an explosive force equal to about 200 kilograms of TNT.

Earlier agency reports from the Lebanese capital quoted witnesses as saying that the 34-year-old Jemayel was dug out from under the rubble about an hour after the 4 p.m. explosion, and walked away unscathed.

Jerusalem: Murder is blow to Arab moderates

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent

Officials in Jerusalem confirmed after midnight last night that their own information pointed to Bashir Jemayel being dead. But there was no complete confirmation of the agency report from Beirut.

Because of the unclarity, no Israel government statement was issued.

Unofficially, though, a highly placed source commented, "This is another proof, if proof were needed, of the fact that Lebanon has been ruled for years by PLO-type terror, and has lived under the fear of murder as a means of conducting politics. This is another demonstration of the need to restore freedom and democracy to Lebanon and to remove the terrorists and all foreign forces from that country. Otherwise, the violence will never end."

Non-government observers in Jerusalem noted sadly that Bashir Jemayel's murder would be used by Arab rejectionists to prove to moderates that Arab leaders who move towards peace with Israel come to a violent end — witness King Abdullah in 1951, President Sadat in 1981 and now President-elect Bashir Jemayel.

Princess Grace dies

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (UPI). — Princess Grace of Monaco, who abandoned the pinnacle of stardom in Hollywood for a real-life marriage to a handsome prince, died yesterday of injuries suffered in a fiery car crash last Monday, the royal palace said. She was 52.

The princess, the former film star Grace Kelly of Philadelphia died at 4.30 p.m., a palace spokesman said, adding she died of a broken right thighbone, collarbone and ribs when the car she was driving went out of control, plunged down a 45-foot embankment and burst into flames.

COSIA, Cyprus (AP). — Iraqi ir Force jets yesterday bombed oil nd other "vital installations" on he Iranian island of Kharg as ound fighting continued along the an-Iraq battlefront, an Iraqi itary spokesman announced in hdad.

Iran said in a separate dispatch that Iraqi oil installations at Fao in southern Iraq sustained damage due to Iranian shelling which also killed or wounded 29 Iraqi troops. Twenty-five more Iraqis were killed or wounded by Iranian security forces in the same general area.

raper opens talks in Jerusalem today

Post Diplomatic Correspondent

U.S. diplomat Morris Draper, newly elevated to the rank of roving ambassador, opens talks in erusalem with Foreign Minister itzhak Shamir this morning on the opped-for withdrawal of all foreign rces from Lebanon.

Draper, who assisted peacemaker Philip Habib throughout the Beirut mediation effort, flew back to the region last night. He will be joined by Habib himself later in the month. he two men apparently plan to uttle between Jerusalem, amascus and Beirut for what ould become a protracted negotiation.

Menahem Horowitz adds:

Shamir, speaking last night in Rosh Pina to mark the town's 100th anniversary, said he hoped that the talks will lead to a "withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon without any additional delays or extensions."

He said that Monday's air strikes in the Bekaa Valley were meant to deter Syrian and PLO troops from committing any further cease-fire violations.

Bekaa now silent after air attack

Jerusalem Post Staff

JAB JENIN. — Following nearly a month-and-a-half of daily violations of the cease-fire by the Syrians and terrorists in the Bekaa Valley, the entire eastern Lebanese front was silent yesterday.

From time to time, reconnaissance flights by the Israel Air Force startled ground troops on both sides with sonic booms.

In the villages of Jab Jenin, Kamed al-Lus and Mansoura residents strolled in the markets and conducted their affairs without the tension that had prevailed since early August. Many villagers said they hoped that Monday's massive air strikes by the IAF have finally brought peace to the Bekaa.

But others said they expect the fighting to resume. Despite the calm, almost no farmers went off to work in fields located in the no-man's-land between the lines.

Syrian troops along the Beirut-Damascus highway in the central sector prevented Lebanese citizens from crossing from Israeli-held sectors to Syrian-held areas, for the first time in more than a month.

Eitan says air force destroyed Libyan SAMs

By BENNY MORRIS
Jerusalem Post Reporter

IDF Chief of Staff Rav Aluf Rafael Eitan yesterday revealed that the air force had destroyed a number of Libyan-manned SAM-8 and SAM-9 batteries during Monday's air assault on Syrian-held eastern Lebanon.

Speaking to the Knesset Defence and Foreign Affairs Committee, Eitan said that only IDF actions of this sort would curb Syrian and PLO attacks.

Eitan said that the Syrians do not want to evacuate their troops from Lebanon and that he anticipated a protracted negotiating process to secure their departure.

Committee chairman Eliahu Ben-Elissar asked if the IDF was properly equipped to face the harsh Lebanese winter. Eitan answered that it was, expressing the hope that there would be no "winter panic" among the public.

Eitan claimed that "not even a fingernail" of an IDF soldier had ever frozen during winter.

Eitan said that the Syrians had recently sent a brigade into northern Lebanon to reinforce their positions and that the IDF in Monday's raids had cut the Beirut-Damascus highway in two places.

According to Army Radio, Eitan also said that the IDF would keep contingents around Beirut so that the PLO would not again take hold in the Lebanese capital.

Sarid said that PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat had gained a political success from the evacuation of Beirut. Eitan countered that Arafat had "left on all fours," after being thoroughly defeated.

Tehiya MK Geula Cohen said the U.S. had, with its recent peace plan and announcements, encouraged Syrian belligerency. Cohen charged that after each war the U.S. always sows the seeds of the next.

Arens briefs Shultz on latest fighting

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Israel's ambassador to Washington Moshe Arens met here yesterday with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz to inform him of the Israeli government's views on possible solutions to the Lebanese crisis and on negotiations for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

Arens also explained the significance of Monday's military action in the Bekaa Valley and discussed the dangers of a renewal of full-scale war.

The meeting, which was requested by Arens, lasted about half an hour.

Pope John Paul is to receive Arafat today

VATICAN CITY (AP). — Pope John Paul II, despite sharp protests from Israeli officials and Jewish organizations, will go ahead today with a private meeting with PLO chief Yasser Arafat, Vatican sources said yesterday.

The audience will be low-key and probably short, held in the late afternoon after the pope's regular general audience in St. Peter's Square, the sources said.

Plans call for the pope to stop at the nearby Paul VI auditorium to meet Arafat in one of the small audience rooms before boarding a helicopter to return to his summer palace in Castel Gandolfo south of Rome, sources said.

The meeting in no way implies any kind of legal recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization, said a Vatican official who asked that his name not be used. He said the PLO had sought the meeting and that the pope agreed to it in response to his "humanitarian concerns" for the Palestinian people.

Arafat is also due to meet, probably tomorrow, Italian President Sandro Pertini.

Both Premier Giovanni Spadolini and Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo have refused to meet Arafat after members of the governing Christian-Democratic coalition felt misgivings and said that such a meeting would weaken the western alliance and Italy's ties with Israel.

A number of Italian politicians, including several linked to the government majority, have said they plan to call on Arafat.

Extraordinary precautions are being taken to ensure the PLO's leader security during his expected two-day stay in Rome. 2,500 police have been mobilized for the visit.

Post Knesset Reporter Aryeh Rubinstein reports: Italian President Sandro Pertini was applauded at the festive opening session of the Inter-parliamentary Union conference yesterday when he expressed "our human solidarity" with the Palestinians.

"The Palestinians," he said, "are now compelled to the same tragic exodus which, for centuries, has been the destiny of the peoples of Israel. They too have had to aban-

Renewal of UNIFIL mandate is in doubt

By BILL KRITZBERG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — There are growing indications that UNIFIL's peacekeeping mandate in Southern Lebanon may not be renewed by the UN Security Council when it expires on October 19.

The war has brought into question the usefulness of the 7,000-man UN Interim Force in Lebanon. With a new Lebanese government taking office on September 24, the enhanced prospect of a restoration of strong Lebanese sovereignty in the south, and the removal of the terrorists from the area under UNIFIL control, it appears that the departure of UNIFIL forces is inevitable. The only question seems to lie with the timing of the withdrawal.

Israeli sources have expressed satisfaction that UNIFIL may leave. "We don't see any usefulness in an extension of the mandate," one source said. "We never wanted it to continue."

"UNIFIL's mandate was to remove us and it didn't succeed, so the mandate is inoperative," a senior IDF officer said. "We will solve the problem of the terrorists; the human problems don't require UNIFIL."

But Lieutenant-General William Callaghan, commander of UNIFIL, warned against expectations that the force might depart shortly. "Many people have predicted our demise before," he said.

"UNIFIL has outlived many such forecasts."

Callaghan said that the UNIFIL force has been quite successful, but "one thing was lacking in the mandate — the cooperation of the parties."

UNIFIL spokesman Timor Goksel was circumspect about the fate of the UN presence. "It's changing. It's difficult to predict," he said. Referring to the inhabitants of Southern Lebanon, he said, "they see the Lebanese government as we do, as the primary salvation of the country." Goksel noted that the countries contributing forces to UNIFIL "asked for a shorter renewal" of the mandate in August. These countries are beginning to "ask what it's for," he said. He expressed his own opinion, however, that UNIFIL is "indispensable."

Israeli and UNIFIL sources differed in their assessment of the local Lebanese attitudes towards a continued UN presence in the area. "The locals don't want them now," an IDF officer said.

Goksel observed: "There is a change for the better recently because the number of troublemakers has gone down since the Israeli invasion." He conceded, however, that "you don't need 7,000 men here for a humanitarian mandate."

Local residents in the area were divided on the issue. The Christians in Major Sa'ad Haddad's enclave said they would like to see UNIFIL leave, while Shi'ites living directly under UN control were more positive about its continued presence.

Subdued affair for Bastille Day

Post Political Correspondent

JAFFA. — Few of Israel's leaders were in attendance at a subdued Bastille Day reception given last night by French Ambassador Marc Bonnefous at his residence here.

The low-key celebration was due to a semi-official boycott of the July 14th festivities because of the comparison made recently by French President Francois Mitterrand of Operation Peace for Galilee to Nazi atrocities in wartime France.

The only Israeli political leaders present were Knesset Speaker Menahem Savidor, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Minister without Portfolio Yitzhak Moda'i, Labour Party chairman Shimon Peres and Jewish Agency chairman Arye Dulzin.

No other Knesset members were present, unlike last year's Bastille Day observance, when Prime Minister Menachem Begin led a throng of celebrants. Many of the Israelis who attended did so despite the present chill in Paris-Jerusalem relations and in tribute to the popular Bonnefous, who will finish his tour of duty in Israel before next year's observance.

Sammy Davis Jr. sees Begin, soldiers

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Sammy Davis Jr. was the candyman yesterday, dispensing autographs, smiles, good cheer and encouragement on the first full day of his visit here, sponsored by the Soldiers Welfare Association.

Disregarding a bad case of jet lag and a very heavy schedule, the U.S. entertainer plunged into a whirlwind tour that took him to Prime Minister Menachem Begin's office in the Knesset, a soldiers' rest home in Acre, a naval base in Haifa and finally, a visit to the city's Rambam Hospital, where he greeted soldiers and civilians wounded in the war in Lebanon.

During their meeting, Begin told Davis that Israel had struck just in the nick of time, and detailed the many PLO atrocities in Lebanon. He urged Davis to speak to the people in Lebanon and judge for himself the necessity for Israeli action. Tomorrow, Davis is scheduled to travel to Lebanon.

Michael Blankfort, writer, at 74

Novelist, playwright and screenwriter Michael Blankfort, the author of Juggler and Ball of Fire, died yesterday in Los Angeles, The Jerusalem Post has learned. He was 74.

Until last year Blankfort was president of the Hollywood Screen Writers Guild.

A frequent visitor and constant supporter of Israel, he led a drive following the Yom Kippur War that raised $10 million for Israel.

He is survived by his wife, two daughters and four grandchildren.

IDF takes over advanced Soviet equipment

By YITZHAK OKED, Jerusalem Post Reporter

SIDON. — If Sgan-Aluf Moshe's calculations are correct, one complex of advanced equipment supplied by the Soviets to the terrorists and now in Israeli hands is worth about $250m. or about one-quarter of the estimated $1b. financial price of the war thus far.

Moshe, a commander of one of the IDF units bringing back materiel to Israel, was speaking to reporters touring Lebanon under the auspices of Egged.

The officer said that the complex of sophisticated Soviet equipment is one of many items being found every day in Lebanon. Refusing to give details, he said that the equipment was revolutionary, highly technical, included computers and needed several dozen trucks to transport it to Israel.

Another piece of Soviet equipment not known in the West and now in Israeli hands, is a giant boring machine for tunnelling into mountains. "People who have seen this machine do not believe their eyes when they see it in action. If we put it on one side of Mount Tabor and start drilling, we could have a tunnel right through in not more than two days," he said.

It is believed that the terrorists used this machine to tunnel into mountains, which were then turned into arsenals.

"Our problem is that every day, yes every day, we are finding more and more hidden arsenals," he said.

He noted that the finds were not always purely military. One of these was an enormous store of wooden planks, probably to be used by the terrorists for the construction of bunkers and other buildings. Moshe estimated that just to empty out this enormous store would take a dozen trucks over a month.

British woman alleges two women soldiers beat her

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

A 24-year-old British woman who works as a research assistant at Birzeit University in the West Bank has alleged that she was beaten with a wooden truncheon by two women soldiers in the Ramallah military government headquarters on Sunday afternoon.

Military sources last night confirmed that an official complaint had been filed and said it was being checked by the investigative arm of the Military Police and not within the military government unit itself.

An official of the British consulate in East Jerusalem is expected to lodge a complaint with the Foreign Ministry today. The story of the alleged attack is being widely reported by the British press and radio.

The woman, Anne Scott, could not be reached yesterday, after she related her story to Kol Yisrael in the morning. Several of her associates at Birzeit have repeated her allegations.

Scott alleges she was detained on Sunday afternoon by a soldier she identifies as "Uri" outside military government headquarters where she was with two students waiting to reclaim their identity cards. University officials regularly accompany students summoned by the military government because of allegations of intimidation there.

The soldier originally detained Scott because her visa had expired. Scott claims she had been granted a work permit and she understood that because of it, the Interior Ministry would issue her a suitable visa.

After signing a statement acknowledging her visa was no longer valid, Scott claims she was taken to a soldiers' dormitory by two women soldiers who began to question her about why she was in Birzeit. When she refused to answer and demanded that a lawyer be present, Scott alleges the soldiers took out a truncheon from behind a cupboard and beat her on the upper arms, shoulders and legs.

After several hours Scott alleges she was transferred to the Russian Compound in Jerusalem and held without being questioned and without having charges brought against her until Tuesday morning.

On her release Scott says she went to a doctor at the al-Makassid Hospital in East Jerusalem, who signed a statement confirming contusions on the legs and upper arms. A representative of the British consul in East Jerusalem last night confirmed she was bruised in these areas.

According to consular officials, Scott arrived some six months ago and had been sent to Birzeit as a research assistant on a bursary provided by the UN Association in Britain.

She has a degree in modern Middle East studies from the University of Durham. She was born in Kuwait where her father was employed as an oil engineer. When she was 12, the family moved back to the small Yorkshire farming town of Skipton. She was also active in a voluntary capacity in public relations work for Birzeit.

A consular official in Jerusalem said last night that while British nationals have previously reported that their passports had occasionally been taken, this was the first case of detention and alleged beating to come to their attention.

Last week university officials also complained that two young students had been severely beaten by border policemen while being held in Ramallah. They produced medical certificates to back up the allegations.

East Beirutis crowd tranquil Junieh

Jerusalem Post Reporter

JUNIEH. — Thousands of East Beirut residents have left the Lebanese capital and its intermittent artillery shellings for this coastal resort town, 20 kilometres to the north. Here the war is hardly felt, and the city's five hotels are totally filled.

Junieh's swimming pools and beaches are crowded day and night. Vacationers in the town, which has managed to stay out of the seven-year-old Lebanese civil war, can watch the live fire "display" from the direction of Beirut.

A significant number of foreign tourists ware vacationing in Junieh as well. Many of them are veteran visitors to the town, who say they will never abandon their favourite resort.

Many of Beirutis present say they intend to stay in Junieh on extended vacation until the fighting in the capital ends.

Damascus attitude worries Syrian Druse

Jerusalem Post Reporter

METULLA. — Syrian Druse have expressed fear that their government's attitude towards them will change for the worse following the Lebanese Druse community's welcome to invading Israeli forces.

Syrian Druse arriving at the border near Majdal Shams in the Golan Heights yesterday told relatives on the Israeli-controlled side that members of the sect have encountered hostility lately from Damascus officials, who speak of the "treason" of their co-religionists in Lebanon. Until Israel's invasion, Syrian soldiers were stationed in much of the Druse region of Lebanon.

Hundreds of Syrian Druse have come to the fence separating their country from the Golan during the last few days, to speak to relatives on the other side. It was the first time in several months that the Syrian authorities allowed such visits, after cancelling them during the strike this spring by Golan Druse against Israel's annexation of the territory.

Mapam head belittles Sartawi's 'recognition'

TEL AVIV. — Mapam's secretary-general Victor Shemtov yesterday dismissed as inconsequential PLO European representative Issam Sartawi's declaration earlier this week which indicated a PLO willingness to recognize Israel's existence.

"Regretfully, Sartawi's is a solitary call," Shemtov said, noting that in the past, the Palestinian "ambassador" had been chided by his colleagues for similar pronouncements. "The leaders of the PLO have so far shown neither the stamina nor the political wisdom necessary for a declaration of a recognition, even a qualified recognition, of Israel's right to exist," Shemtov stated. "Instead, they preferred a military to a political solution."

By "political," he meant a solution based on a territorial compromise, Shemtov said. According to Mapam, Israel should negotiate peace with "any Palestinian element that recognizes Israel's right to exist, and which does not resort to terror but is ready to live in peace with it."

Begin meets with officer protestors

Three reserve officers, released from active duty, met last week with Prime Minister Menachem Begin to protest against the war in Lebanon. One of them was the son of Interior Minister Yosef Burg, Avraham, 27, a reserve paratroop officer. They met with Begin for an hour and a half.

The meeting followed a letter they had sent to Begin in which they expressed their feelings and that of their comrades about the war.

The newspaper Davar, which first reported the fact of the meeting yesterday, said the men told Begin that the war should be stopped and that not another single soldier's life should be sacrificed in Lebanon. They opposed any notion of Israel assaulting West Beirut.

The men also spoke strongly in condemnation of Defence Minister Ariel Sharon.

Harassed civil servants invited to complain

Any civil servant suffering from political harassment from his seniors can contact the Knesset State Control Committee in writing, by phone or in person, chairman Avraham Katz-Oz announced.

Katz-Oz said in a statement that after his comments on the political probe by the aide of Communications Minister Mordechai Zipori, against a ministry employee who criticized the war in Lebanon, he got "many other such complaints from civil servants in other ministries" who reported what he called a "McCarthyist atmosphere, party provocation and talebearing."

saying yesterday that the French had proposed a new plan, according to which French troops would separate the PLO and Israeli forces until most of the PLO had left Beirut, after which the Americans would come in along with Greek and possibly also Italian forces.

Salam said French Ambassador to Lebanon Paul-Marc Henry had come to him on Tuesday morning with the plan. The two men had a long discussion with Habib.

"Now it has come to the point where the Americans say 'all right, it is not exactly as you understand it, that we won't have our soldiers ashore until after the departure of (the PLO) — after a great number of Palestinians have departed we will come in.' So the French could come forward as a vanguard and take charge for a while, and then the Americans could come in, with the Italians and the Greeks, too," Salam said.

He said the Israelis had rejected one part of the plan. The French had suggested the PLO be gathered in Lebanese army barracks in Beirut as the French moved in, then the Israelis would be asked to withdraw from the city.

"The Israelis refused this because they want to stick to every inch they are on now," he said. "They wouldn't do it unless the last of the Palestinian combatants leave Beirut and Lebanon."

Salam said the plan was "not totally unacceptable to the Israelis. It is still being discussed in parts." He added that the negotiators were working on details of how the French would move in, even if the Israelis refused to withdraw.

Salam said the negotiations on the French plan represented "some progress, some small progress."

PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, after emerging from a one-hour meeting with Salam yesterday afternoon, told the Associated Press that "definitely there is progress. I don't want to describe it, but definitely there is."

Salam also said that "much depends" on the meeting in Washington between the Arab foreign ministers and Shultz especially on the question of the Syrians. "I am awaiting the outcome of that meeting in Washington, to know what deal will be made," he said.

Meanwhile, the independent Lebanese daily an-Nahar reported yesterday that Habib told Lebanese officials that Israel had given him "only a few more days" to arrange for the peaceful evacuation of the PLO from West Beirut.

But several sources in Beirut were quoted as saying that Habib's efforts were, in effect, "frozen" yesterday, pending the scheduled meeting in Washington this week of Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam and his Saudi counterpart, Prince Saud al-Faisal, with President Reagan and Secretary-of-State Designate Shultz.

It was hoped that the meeting would result in a reversal of Syria's refusal to accept the 6,000-odd PLO fighters evacuated from Beirut — a position which many observers view as the main snag holding up efforts to evacuate the PLO from Beirut.

It has also been noted however, that even if Syria were to reserve its position and accept the PLO, this would still not resolve the vexed question of when the evacuation to Syria would take place — before the deployment of the multinational force in Beirut, as demanded by the Israel, or after, as demanded by the PLO.

Meanwhile, there was some concern in Beirut last night that the Khaddam-Saud visit might not take place at all in view of the renewed crisis in the Persian Gulf.

Both Syria and Saudi Arabia have a vested interest in the Gulf dispute, with Syria firmly committed to Iran and Saudi Arabia as firmly committed to Iraq — something that could hinder their own efforts to arrive at a joint position on Lebanon.

As of late last night, neither Khaddam nor Saud were reported to have left for Washington.

There was also considerable concern in Beirut that the renewed fighting in the Gulf could direct international attention away from Lebanon, giving Israel the opportunity to launch a lightening strike on the PLO in West Beirut.

Captured Gazelle to be displayed

By HIRSH GOODMAN
Post Defence Correspondent

Israel will display a Gazelle attack helicopter captured from the Syrians during Operation Peace for Galilee at an Air Force Day parade this afternoon.

The Gazelle was found virtually intact in southern Lebanon.

The helicopter is reported to be in operational condition after being totally overhauled by an Air Force maintenance crew.

It will be flown before an invited audience as the centre piece of this year's Air Force Day observance at a base in the South.

The Gazelle is the joint product of the French firm, Aerospatiale, and the British company, Westland. It comes in two versions, the more advanced carrying six HOT anti-tank missiles and having an operational range of 755 kilometres. It has been in service with the Syrians for over five years. They were used several times by the Syrians in the war, and Israel claims a number of certain kills.

Israel has two attack helicopters, the Cobra and the Defender, both American-made and both using the TOW anti-tank missile as their primary weapon.

Peres: Socialist meet 'great success'

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Labour Party Chairman Shimon Peres reported on his return to Israel yesterday that his participation in the just concluded Socialist International meeting in Copenhagen was a "great success."

Peres said Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky "remained alone in his anti-Israel outbursts. In the end our arguments were accepted. Israel was not condemned and its right to defend itself, even beyond its frontiers, was accepted. For the first time the International condemned terror."

The Socialist International called on Israel not to enter West Beirut and to seek a diplomatic solution to the Palestinian problem. Also called for were a politically independent Lebanon and a multinational force to be established there.

Kreisky had a loud verbal exchange with Peres when the Austrian chancellor interrupted his address to the presidium several times. Former Portuguese premier Mario Soares, who was here recently on a fact-finding mission, expressed strong support for the Labour Party stand, Peres said.

El Al ready to run air link to Lebanon

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — El Al is seeking an arrangement to enable air passengers to and from Lebanon to fly via Ben-Gurion Airport, airline president Yitzhak Shander told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

He said the service could begin 48 to 60 hours after final government approval is given. The plan has already been approved in principle, the Interior Ministry said.

Shander said El Al has received many requestes to provide such a service. Lebanon's one international airport at Beirut has been cut off by heavy fighting, forcing air passengers to travel by sea or roundabout roads to Syria in order to fly abroad. The simplest and easiest thing would be to go through Ben-Gurion Airport, Shander said.

If the arrangement goes into effect, El Al will send officials to Lebanon to sell and endorse tickets of other airlines. It will work through the Israel Defence Forces unit for assisting Lebanese civilians and will not have an office of its own, The Post was told.

Air passengers for Lebanon will be issued transit visas in Israeli embassies abroad. A senior Interior Ministry official said "travel arrangements could be completed quickly if passengers come on El Al, because the national carrier has better security arrangements.

"Whoever wants to come on a foreign carrier will be welcome to do so, but it may take longer to complete transit formalities," he added.

So far only a few air passengers have gone to Lebanon via Israel, and solely on an ad hoc basis, such as one traveller from Cyprus who was permitted to enter Israel at Ben-Gurion and proceed through Metulla to Lebanon.

SENATE UNIT

Israel's friends was clearly related to his accompanying statements of support for Israel's security.

On Tuesday, he related one story which he said had had a moving impact on his thinking of the Arab-Israeli conflict. During the 1967 Six-Day War, when he was dean of the University of Chicago School of Business, one of his graduate students was Yosef Levi, an Israeli who returned home to join his reserve unit on the Golan Heights, and was later killed in action. Shultz was so touched by Levi's devotion to Israel that he went there shortly thereafter to pay his respects to the fallen student.

The secretary-designate also recalled an experience he had in Israel in the immediate aftermath of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977. He said he was especially affected by the mood of the women in Israel, and their strong desire for peace.

By pressing for a resolution of the Palestinian question, he repeatedly said, the U.S. was actually working in Israel's own best interests.

Na'amat protests sterilization condition

The Na'amat women's organization yesterday protested against what it claimed was a Health Ministry intention to allow sterilization of women only if the husband approved.

Na'amat secretary-general Masha Lubelsky said in a communique that there was no precedent for making a medical operation on one person conditional on approval from another. She claimed that such a precedent would transform the ministry into a branch of Agudat Yisrael.

The Health Ministry spokeswoman said last night that no such regulation existed. But she admitted that the matter was under discussion.

AIR POTENTIAL

Ivri said that while in modern warfare (and the war against the Syrians was a battle of sophisticated systems), it is ultimately the pilot who counts. Israeli pilots were also backed by efficient electronics, superior training and discipline, and better weapons than the other side. All these factors together culminated in Israel's success, he said, as well as the correct applications of operational conclusions drawn from past combat experience.

Air force helicopters carried some 1,200 wounded from the battlefield to hospitals and thousands of supplies to the front during the war, often under extremely dangerous conditions, as well as after the main fighting eased.

Planes flew mission from the new airfields at Uvda and Ramon just two months after these Negev bases were opened, Ivri said, adding he thinks it incredible that those responsible for the relocation project from the Sinai had managed to get the bases operational so soon.

Operation Peace for Galilee and the battle with the Syrians was unique in several respects, Ivri said. The limitation posed on the air force in the opening stages of the war to avoid all contact with the Syrians was a new factor for the air force to contend with in a war situation, while the crowded skies posed difficult problems in terms of battle management.

ISRAEL EASES

President Reagan at the end of last week not to launch a military assault on West Beirut.

Shamir said in the interview that Israel would only permit a planned multinational force to supervise the evacuation of the PLO after a sizeable number had already left Lebanon.

Israel is not insisting the PLO leave by any particular route.

In a clear signal to Jordan, Shamir insisted that Israel had no interest or desire in deposing King Hussein.

This was plainly a reference to the scheme, long canvassed by Defence Minister Sharon, of "helping" the PLO to overthrow the Hashemite House and set up a Palestinian republic in Jordan.

Shamir declared that Jordan today (under King Hussein) "geographically and demographically is a Palestinian Arab state."

SANCTIONS

say Cairo's earlier stridency has moderated in recent days and there seems to be a waning of enthusiasm there over a French-Egyptian initiative at the UN, which Israel saw as an effort to "save the PLO."

Nevertheless, an Israeli assault on Beirut would almost certainly bring a tough diplomatic reaction from Egypt, and there are fears here in Jerusalem that such a reaction could lead to a serious deterioration of relations.

A telephone in every home foreseen within three years

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The "good news" is that within three months, the long awaited communications company will become a reality. The bad news is that the government company, slated to take over all of the telephone and telecommunication engineering activities now handled by the Communications Ministry, will take at least three years to catch up with the backlog of 200,000 people and companies currently waiting for a telephone.

Yitzhak Kaul, the ministry's deputy director-general in charge of human resources, made this assessment before participants in a study day on communications, held in conjunction with this week's communication exhibition Tikshoret 82 at the Plaza Hotel.

Kaul, who heads a committee that is putting the final touches to the new communications company, told The Jerusalem Post that the negotiations with the workers are proceeding well and barring any last-minute hitches, the company should be established within the next three months.

Kaul also painted a near Utopian picture of Israel's communications after the company starts operating. The list includes a general improvement in service; phone repairs within 48 hours; a large selection of new communications gadgetry that will be available to telephone subscribers; and arrangements for subscribers to settle all problems by telephone.

He admitted that the new company may get off to a bit of a rough start because it will be the first company formed from part of a government ministry. About 8,000 ministry workers will be transferred to the new company.

Most teachers get their pay, strike threat off for now

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut Teachers Union has rescinded its threat to strike after an effort by the Ministry of Education to pay many of the teachers who failed to receive their August salaries on time.

"I think it's a scandal that the Ministry didn't see to it that all the teachers were paid before the holiday," Union treasurer Pinhas Hagin said yesterday. "The strike of financial officers is the problem of the Education and Finance ministries, not ours. The government is ready to live with delays in paying teachers' salaries. We're not."

The reprieve in the schools may only be temporary. This afternoon union representatives will meet with Education Minister Zevulun Hammer and demand that the recurring problems in payment of teachers' salaries be resolved once and for all. "We'll re-evaluate the situation after Rosh Hashana," Hagin said.

A teachers' strike after the Succot vacation may come either over more pay delays, or failure to reach agreement with the government on continued implementation of the Etzioni Commission recommendations, which include substantial pay raises, long opposed by the Treasury.

Riot by Acre Arab youths seen as anti-war protest

By YOEL DAR
Jerusalem Post Reporter

ACRE. — Eight Arab youths, aged 16 to 19, were arrested yesterday on suspicion of taking part in a riot in the Old City here on Monday night.

The suspects yesterday denied before the Acre Magistrates Court that the rampage was an act of protest against the war in Lebanon. They claimed that it was connected with a local traditional feast.

Spokesman for the Galilee police district, Pakad David Bar-Yehuda, told The Jerusalem Post that Arab youngsters gathered on the beach and near the lighthouse adjacent to the ancient walls, burned tires and stoned bystanders and passing cars. As a result of their rampage, four residents were slightly injured and two vehicles were damaged.

Policemen, headed by chief commander of the Galilee district, Nitzav-Mishne Meir Sadeh, were rushed to the scene. Some local government sources claimed the youngsters attempted to express their objection to the war, in which "their brethren were massacred."

This is not the first hostile incident in the north. In the past six weeks police arrested dozens of Arab youngsters in connection with harassment of their Jewish neighbours in the Segev bloc.

Censors to scrutinize new Sobol play

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Members of the Film and Theatre Censorship Board are to see a rehearsal of a controversial new play by Israeli author Yehoshua Sobol before deciding if it can be staged.

The board has so far not issued a licence for "The Last Night of Otto Weininger," which is due to get its first public performance at the Haifa Theatre on October 20.

The play is set in Vienna at the end of the 19th century and concerns the life of philosopher Otto Weininger who committed suicide at the age of 23.

Censorship Board Chairman Yehoshua Justman said last night that there was no objection to the text of the play but there were reservations about one scene which is set in a brothel. "We have to know what this scene contains and how it will be shown, before we can issue a permit. We are not going to judge it until we have seen it," he added.

Yehoshua Sobol. (Jaacov Agor)

Haifa theatre manager Noem Semel said he had invited members of the censorship board to rehearsals and hoped that a permit will be issued. He said the theatre would oppose moves to censor any of the play.

High Court upholds Lebanon import ban

The High Court of Justice yesterday rejected a petition by a Jerusalem reservist against Chief of Staff Rav-Aluf Rafael Eitan's ban on the importing of goods by Israel Defence Forces soldiers from Lebanon.

Petitioner Roland Roth, an attorney, said that as a reservist serving in Lebanon, he should be allowed to import various goods without duty. He argued that Eitan's ban had been imposed for reasons other than security, and was thus illegal.

Deputy State Attorney Eli Ben-Tovim responded that the ban was imposed not for economic reasons, but to safeguard military discipline in light of the IDF's experience during the Litani Operation in 1978. The measure is needed, Ben-Tovim argued, to preserve the image of the IDF and to aid the campaign against looting.

Justices Shlomo Levin, Dov Levin and Shoshana Netanyahu accepted the state's arguments, citing the "sad and regretful experience concerning the behaviour of IDF soldiers in Lebanon during the Litani Operation." The court hoped Eitan's measures would serve as "effective supervision on the part of the army" in preventing looting and other crimes against property in Lebanon. (Itim)

Jewish councils in Galilee short IS300m.

Jerusalem Post Reporter

UPPER NAZARETH. — Forty-one Jewish local councils in Galilee need at least IS300 million to get them out of their financial troubles, the mayor of Upper Nazareth said yesterday.

Speaking with The Jerusalem Post, Mayor Menahem Ariav, who is also chairman of Jewish settlements in the North, said that for lack of funds many local councils have not paid salaries for months, and that several contractors have sued them for non-payment.

Ariav also said that the Jewish population of the area continues to decline compared with the Arab population and the government must invest more time and energy to give Galilee top priority for development.

Beduin workers reject move to West Bank

Jerusalem Post Reporter

BEERSHEBA. — The staff of the Beersheba Labour Council, Beduin section, yesterday turned down a proposal tabled last week by Labour-Alignment MK Uri Sabag calling for Beduin settlements in Judea and Samaria.

"We contemptuously reject MK Uri Sabag's proposal dealing with the solution to the Beduin problem in the Negev through settlements in Judea and Samaria," the staff statement said. It called on all the political parties and the government to find a proper and just solution to the problems, especially those of the Beduin of Tel-Malhata.

Prominent Beduin told The Jerusalem Post that they consider the Sabag proposals tantamount to eviction and dispossession.

Bar-Dagan named IDF signals chief

Post Defence Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Tat-Aluf Mordechai Bar-Dagan yesterday became chief signals and electronics officer, replacing Tat-Aluf Zvi Amid who is to head the new telephone company.

Bar-Dagan, who was promoted yesterday from the rank of Aluf-Mishne, was born in Jerusalem in 1938. He joined the Signal Corps in 1956 as a radio-telephone technician.

During the Six Day War of 1967, he commanded a communications unit in a tank brigade in Sinai and during the 1973 Yom Kippur War, was the communications officer of an armoured division on the Golan Heights.

King foresees Jordanian-Palestinian 'federation'

Israel dismisses Hussein's remarks

Jerusalem Post Staff

Israel reacted coldly yesterday to Jordanian King Hussein's remark that it had been "absurd not to recognize Israel for 34 years." Government officials argued that the monarch's statement on British television was nothing more than "an optical observation that Israel exists." It contained no readiness to negotiate, and no readiness to live in peace and normal relations with the Jewish state, these officials maintained.

King Hussein, in the Monday night interview on the BBC's Panorama programme, spoke of normalization once peace had been established. He envisaged a federation between a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza, and his own Hashemite kingdom.

He said he personally had recognized Israel's right to exist since he had helped form UN Security Council Resolution 242. But he added, "If we are talking about diplomatic relations and normal relations, it is premature to speak of that. But, obviously at the end of the line, when we establish peace, one visualizes normal relations." At the end of negotiations there would be recognition of Israel, he said.

King Hussein said he did not believe there could be serious negotiations with the government of Israel as it stands.

Asked whether he thought there could be a compromise between the Reagan plan for an association between the West Bank and Jordan, and the Fez plan for an independent Palestinian state run by the PLO, he said that the Reagan plan was something new.

"I believe it to be the most courageous stand taken by an American administration since 1956. I believe it to be a very constructive and a very positive move. I would certainly like to see it continue and evolve," Hussein said.

But the Israeli officials insisted that this "vague, hypothetical" talk of peace in the future was "absurd." If Hussein were sincere, he would pronounce himself ready to negotiate here and now, "not merely imply that he is ready to retake the West Bank and Gaza, without negotiations, under the new U.S. peace proposals."

If Hussein were sincere, moreover, he would join the Camp David process, the officials added.

The officials strenuously denied that Hussein's statements had embarrassed the Israel government, which on Sunday pronounced the "Jordanian option dead" in the wake of the Fez Arab summit.

The Labour Party spokesman yesterday afternoon labelled the official reaction to Hussein's remarks "a tragic oversight in the face of a historic chance for peace." The government's obtuseness could be a cause for regret for generations to come, he said.

Earlier in the day, the Labour Party reaction team made it clear that it considered Hussein's remarks an indication of a new trend. Israel must support a political initiative "to promote a solution to the Israeli-Arab dispute through direct and free negotiations without prior conditions, with Jordan and with representatives of the West Bank and Gaza, in conjunction with the U.S. and Egypt, based on the Camp David accords."

Israel must "declare forthwith its readiness to negotiate" in the wake of Hussein's "recognition of Israel and his suggestion for a Jordan-Palestinian federation." The government of Israel, the Labour team said, would bear the onus of ignoring the opening created by Hussein's words.

Jordan's King Hussein. (UPI)

Hussein stressed in the interview that he intends to play "a very, very active role" in the search for a just and durable peace in the Middle East.

Asked whether there was now a rapprochement between Jordan and the PLO, he replied that there had always been "an ongoing dialogue." And he added: "I believe the time is coming soon when we can jointly define the framework for the future relations of Palestine and Jordan so that at an appropriate moment this can be presented to Jordanians and Palestinians in the form of a referendum. I do not believe there are any problems between us." That framework, he thought, could be a federation.

While he did not believe that the Fez summit had mandated him to handle the problems of the West Bank, he saw a clear role for his country in supporting the Palestinians "in seeking their rights on their legitimate soil."

He dismissed as "utter nonsense" Defence Minister Ariel Sharon's view that "Jordan is Palestine" and also emphasized that there was "no possibility of compromise" on the question of incorporating East Jerusalem in the new Palestinian state.

Asked whether it was not increasingly absurd for the Arab world not to recognize Israel, he replied that it was "equally absurd for the major part of the world not to recognize the Peoples' Republic of China for so many years."

As to the future of the PLO, Hussein said that "once Palestine is recovered and Palestinian rights restored on Palestinian soil, the term PLO will cease to exist and the Palestinians will present themselves to the world in a different way."

Both Likud, Labour back court workers' claims

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Knesset Law Committee, displaying unanimous support for the striking court workers' pay claims, yesterday called on the government to meet their demands.

At Likud MK Michael Kleiner's suggestion, the committee, however, decided to avoid a public declaration — which Kleiner said would be counterproductive — and to raise the matter with Justice Minister Moshe Nissim and Finance Minister Yoram Aridor.

Labour MK Shevah Weiss sought to strengthen the appeal to the government by stating that the committee supported "the (court) workers' just demands."

But the idea was dropped when some Likud MKs said that this sounded too much like "the legitimate demands" of the Palestinians, endorsed in the Camp David agreements.

Weiss objected to a suggested "balanced" formulation by Likud MKs which called on the workers to return immediately to work.

Weiss said that although the Likud claims to represent the workers, when it comes to brass tacks, it is on the side of the employers.

Kleiner then charged Weiss with trying to make political capital and indulging in "demagoguery". Deputy Prime Minister Dov Shilansky attacked Weiss for trying to inject "politics" into the court issue.

In the committee's final resolution, the MKs appealed to the government and workers to agree to arbitration.

Works committee representatives attending the Knesset committee meeting said the court workers dispute was "a social problem" and charged that it was one of the few salary disputes in which a minister — that is, Nissim — opposed his own ministry workers' demands.

Truckers want lower insurance rates

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV — The Trucking Board has launched a public campaign for lower compulsory insurance premiums on commercial vehicles. It considers the recent 40 per cent increase in premiums unfair and discriminating, because the rates for private cars were only raised by 14.2 per cent.

The board bases it demand on a study made by Uzi Abel, the general manager of the Avner Root organization for all no-fault compulsory insurance, and by Shai Sapir. The study was submitted to the Tel-Aviv University Centre for Insurance Research. One of its findings is that compulsory insurance for commercial vehicles is about 10 per cent too high. Abel and Sapir said they were surprised at the low percentage of trucks involved in more than one accident.

Polish police disperse 'hooligans' in 2 cities

WARSAW (Reuter). — Demonstrators attacked a column of police vehicles and security forces used tear gas and water cannon in disturbances in two Polish cities Monday, government spokesman Jerzy Urban said yesterday.

Four policemen were injured and dozens of people were arrested in the incidents in Wroclaw and Nowa Huta, the first reported street disturbances since violent clashes between riot police and demonstrators across the country two weeks ago.

Opponents of the military authorities often stage protests on the 13th of the month, marking the imposition of martial law on December 13.

The official news agency PAP said groups of "hooligans" had tried to provoke street violence in the old town area of Wroclaw, Poland's third city, after evening mass at the cathedral. Police moved in, detaining 59 of them.

Later in the evening groups of people attacked a column of vehicles taking police back into the city after their duties.

A cobblestone shattered the windscreen of one police van, injuring the driver and sending the vehicle out of control, it said.

Stones and other heavy objects were showered on police from the windows of houses, PAP said.

*A total of four officers were in*jured and 15 people were arrested, PAP said.

Urban gave an account of the incidents at Nowa Huta, a major industrial city close to Krakow, during a press conference for foreign journalists.

Describing Monday's disturbances as minor, he said riot police used tear gas and water cannon to disperse demonstrations, one in the early afternoon and one in the evening.

At lunchtime, between 200 and 300 people marched from a steel works to the centre of town, gathering supporters on the way, Urban said. In the evening young people clashed with riot police in several parts of the city.

The spokesman said the Nowa Huta demonstrators were acting from over-excitement rather than political motives and that the incidents were not very significant. The martial law authorities have used similar language to describe other public demonstrations of opposition, such as the August 31 disturbances which affected 33 of the country's 49 provinces.

Urban also told foreign reporters that the authorities did not intend to outlaw Solidarity, calling such a move "extreme."

It appeared to be the first time a government official had said bluntly that the authorities would not delegalize the independent trade union. There had been speculation that the authorities might take this step following the fierce August 31 rioting.

Urban did not outline reported unrest in Lodz and Szczecin.

Soviet, Poland warn U.S. against pressure tactics

MOSCOW (AP). — The Soviet Union and Poland warned anew yesterday that interference by the U.S. and other NATO countries into Poland's internal affairs will be "firmly rebuffed."

A joint Soviet-Polish communique, issued at the conclusion of Polish Foreign Minister Stefan Olszowski's two-day visit here, denounced economic sanctions, "propaganda aggression and other manifestations of hostile actions" against Poland and advised:

"All such infringements of the sovereignty and independence of socialist states, (and) any attempts to apply methods of pressure in relations with them will continue to be firmly rebuffed and in the final analysis will hit back against those who take such steps."

There was not a word in the communique about the disturbances that erupted in Poland on August 31, the second anniversary of the founding of the suspended independent trade union Solidarity. The street demonstrations, which left at least five Poles dead and hundreds injured, apparently prompted Olszowski's visit here.

Earlier yesterday, Olszowski told the official Soviet news agency Tass that the U.S. was solely responsible for world tension and that Soviet peace initiatives were "fully in accord with the aspirations of the peoples."

Olszowski renewed the Polish pledge to remain a loyal member of the Soviet bloc, saying "people's Poland is and will be a reliable link of the community of socialist states, making substantial contribution to the fulfillment of the political, defensive tasks of the Warsaw treaty."

Hitch in Argentina delays lifting of UK banking ban

LONDON (AP). — Britain, reversing an earlier announcement, said late Monday that mutual financial sanctions with Argentina would not be lifted immediately, because of legal delays in Buenos Aires.

Earlier in the day, the British Treasury said that the sanctions, imposed in April when the two nations went to war over the Falkland Islands, would be lifted at midnight Monday, London time.

But less than an hour before midnight, a Treasury spokesman made another announcement: "There has been an unexpected delay in Buenos Aires caused by legal procedures which the Argentine government needs to take."

The spokesman gave no indication how long it might take Argentina to sort out the legal procedures, but said the restrictions would be mutually lifted as soon as these were complete.

The earlier Treasury announcement noted that trade sanctions would remain, even if the banking restrictions were lifted. Britain seeks "early progress" on the removal of trade restrictions, he said.

In Buenos Aires, the Argentine Economics Ministry said on Monday no decision had been made yet on the lifting of the financial sanctions, but its communique implied Argentina would agree to the move.

Another Hemingway commits suicide

MIAMI (Reuter). — Ernest Hemingway's younger brother Leicester, also an author and avid deep sea fisherman, killed himself with a pistol in his Miami Beach home Monday, a daughter said yesterday. He was 67.

*Ernest was 62 when he killed him*self with a shotgun in Ketchum, Idaho, in July 1961. Their father Clarence also committed suicide.

Daughter Anne Hemingway Feyer said Leicester was depressed over a recent series of operations in which he had artificial arteries placed in his legs and his prostate gland removed.

Leicester wrote five novels and a 1962 biography, My Brother, Ernest Hemingway.

COOPERATION. — British Defence Secretary John Nott left Saudi Arabia yesterday for Kenya after talks expanding military cooperation with the kingdom.

Rub-a-dub-dub...three men in a tub

HUNSTANTON, England (AP). — Three men who tried to sail a 1.8-metre bathtub, powered by an outboard motor, around the Norfolk coast of England were rescued yesterday after a full-scale air and sea search.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the expedition — designed to raise money for charity — was "foolhardy."

"They are idiots," the spokesman said. "People should not go to sea in bathtubs."

The Coast Guard criticized the men for ignoring advice to take along a radio and said their folly had cost "thousands of pounds" in rescue bills.

The alarm was raised when Anthony Proctor, 36, John Nichol, 26, and Martin Bastin-Northcott, 36, failed to arrive at Hunstanton on Monday night, having set sail from Peterborough last Friday.

They were discovered drifting at sea by the Hunstanton lifeboat, having lost their oars and SOS flares.

The three men, wearing diving suits and flippers, were raising money for medical research. Their bathtub was supported on oil drums and rubber floats.

NBC links shooting of pope to KGB

NEW YORK (AP). — A U.S. network reported yesterday that it had uncovered evidence suggesting that Pope John Paul II was targeted for assassination with the knowledge and perhaps the assistance of Soviet and Bulgarian intelligence agencies.

NBC News said the pope was targeted because of his connection to the Solidarity labour movment in Poland. NBC also disclosed that the pope sent a handwiritten letter to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in 1980 in which he threatened to "lay down the cross of St. Peter" and lead the resistance by his Polish countrymen if Soviet troops moved in.

The letter, delivered by a Vatican envoy, sparked a secret shuttle mission between Moscow, Rome and Warsaw that led eventually to a temporary easing of the Soviet-Polish attitude toward Solidarity, NBC said.

The NBC report came after a nine-month investigation, and details were released in advance of the airing of the documentary, The man who shot the pope — a study in terrorism. It will be broadcast September 21.

NBC traces what it calls an unbroken line from Mehmet Ali Agca, the Turkish gunman convicted for the May 1981 shooting of the pope to organized crime elements in Turkey, the Bulgarian secret service and the Soviet KGB.

PANDARANDS. — China will issue today gold bullion coins engraved with a panda motif for sale abroad, initially in Japan and Hongkong. The "pandarands" contain 99.9 per cent pure gold and come in four sizes — one ounce, a half-ounce, a quarter-ounce and a tenth of an ounce.

Experts retrieve 'black box' of ill-fated Spanish plane

MALAGA (UPI). — Spanish and U.S. investigators yesterday removed the black box of a New York-bound DC-10 vacation charter and examined its engines and molten debris to determine the cause of the crash Monday that killed at least 51 of the 393 people on board.

Regional authorities set up a morgue in a Spanish air force base hangar here for identification of the bodies by family members.

Nearly 50 Americans were still hospitalized with severe burns and smoke inhalation, including one in critical condition, while another 40 Americans stayed in Malaga hotels — too afraid to fly home.

Twenty-eight of the 393 people were still unaccounted for yesterday, regional authorities said.

"I felt a strong vibration from inside the plane," the pilot, Capt. Juan Perez, said yesterday. "It felt as if something hit the plane. It could have been a failure of the controls."

The Transport Ministry said Perez realized he could not brake before the end of the 3.1-kilometre runway and decided to bring the craft down in a field on the other side of the Malaga-Torremolinos highway.

"Today, I feel I saved a lot of people," Perez said. "I could only choose between taking off with the possibility of killing us all or trying to bring the plane down and saving the people," said Perez.

"The most hair-raising thing was leaving a plane that was in flames, with people roasting inside, enveloped by fire, with their legs broken, and very badly injured," said Juan Carlos Gallardo, 19, a Mexican bullfighter.

Barbara Yublonski of Brooklyn, her voice trembling, said, "As I came off the chute, I looked back and saw flames shooting out of the whole back of the plane. My husband was behind me.

"He said, 'Run! Run! Don't stop! The plane is going to explode!'

"You didn't have a minute to think," she added. "You just acted on instinct. When we got to the other side of the road, people were panicking and throwing up."

Italy to ask extradition of key figure in scandal

ROME. — The Justice Ministry said yesterday that it hopes to present Swiss authorities with an extradition request by the end of the week for Licio Gelli, the central figure in a political and financial scandal.

A spokesman for the ministry's extradition office said work began yesterday morning on preparing the "Gelli dossier," or list of criminal charges against Gelli that must accompany the request.

The 62-year-old Gelli, dubbed "the great puppeteer" by the Italian press, is one of the most wanted men in Italy because of his involvement in a top-secret Masonic lodge called Propaganda Two or P-2, believed to be a right-wing sect working to bring down Italy's constitutional order.

Gelli, who was arrested on Monday in Geneva, was grand master of the secret organization.

A U.S. television interview with jailed financier Michele Sindona led police to Gelli, officials in Geneva said yesterday.

Sindona told his interviewer that Gelli had channelled money from the Banco Ambrosiano in Milan to Switzerland.

The interview was retransmitted in Switzerland and seen by police, who traced the money — some $50-70 million — and blocked it hours before Gelli arrived with false identity papers and attempted to withdraw it, the officials said. (AP, UPI).

Marcus Wallenberg, at 82

STOCKHOLM (AP). — Swedish tycoon Marcus Wallenberg, a towering figure in business and industry at home and abroad as the head of a multinational industrial empire, is dead at 82.

His death was announced yesterday by the board of the Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken, Sweden's most influential commercial bank and one in a series of creations by Wallenberg.

A leading force in developing Swedish post-war industry, Wallenberg was the last of his kind, the charismatic head of a family empire wielding unique powers in a modern welfare state.

Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin said, "Sweden's greatest ever industrialist has passed away. His work has been of an invaluable significance to the achievements of Swedish companies both nationally and internationally."

A driving force behind many enterprises in Sweden, Wallenberg personally helped found SAS, the Scandinavian carrier owned jointly by Sweden, Norway and Denmark, and auto maker SAAB-Scania.

The Wallenberg Group, with a combined turnover of 168 billion kronor, (IS772.8 billion) includes major export industries, each with a net of subsidiaries all over the world and employing an estimated half a million people in Sweden and elsewhere.

A dominating banker, Wallenberg was criticized by some politicians who were concerned that so much power was concentrated in one man. His very name became a negative symbol of capitalism to Social Democrats and Communists.

Wallenberg was a distant relative of Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat credited with saving 100,000 Jews from Nazi concentration camps. Raoul Wallenberg was arrested by the Red Army at the end of the war and imprisoned in the Soviet Union. The Soviets declared him dead in 1947, but reports indicate he may still be alive.

Carlton's 20th win

NEW YORK (AP). — Steve Carlton became the first 20-game winner in the major leagues this season, and he also hit a home run, as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated their arch-rivals, the St. Louis Cardinals, 2-0 on Monday night to take over first place from the Cardinals in the National League East.

It was the sixth time in his 17-year major league career that Carlton reached the 20-victory plateau. Carlton, 20-9, struck out 12 and walked none as he posted his fifth shutout of the season and the 51st of his career.

The win in the first game of the three-game series moved the Phillies one-half game ahead of the Cardinals.

In other NL action, Harry Spilman's two-run triple highlighted a three-run eighth-inning rally as Houston came back to beat Atlanta 5-3, thus giving right-hander Joe Niekro a one-game lead over brother Phil in their career matchups.

In late NL action on the West Coast, Steve Garvey slammed a two-out homer in the bottom of the 16th inning to break a 3-3 tie and to give Los Angeles a 4-3 victory over the San Diego Padres. Thus the Dodgers regained first place in the NL West.

Cesar Cedeno's two-run, bases-loaded single with two outs in the top of the 11th inning snapped a 3-3 tie and lifted the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-4 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

In the American League, Lance Parrish's two-run homer in the bottom of the 11th inning powered the Detroit Tigers to a 4-3 come-from-behind victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The loss cut the Brewers' lead in the AL East race to two games over the Baltimore Orioles, who beat the New York Yankees. Rich Dauer's second sacrifice fly snapped a 6-6 tie and highlighted a three-run rally in the seventh inning.

Vida Blue tossed a one-hitter for his fourth straight win as the Kansas City Royals rolled to an 8-0 triumph over the Seattle Mariners. Fred Lynn stroked a pinch-hit, tie-breaking single in the seventh inning to help California defeat Chicago 6-4.

Brearley's win

LONDON (AP). — Former England cricket captain Mike Brearley ended his career in style on Tuesday, hitting the winning runs as Middlesex completed a 10-wicket victory over Worcestershire at Worcester.

Brearley, 40, capped his last season in first class cricket by guiding Middlesex to the championship. Leicestershire finished second and Hampshire third.

Elsewhere, the final day of the county championship programme was a memorable one for West Indian batsman Alvin Kallicharran, who has had an outstanding season with Warwickshire. Kallicharran became the first player this season to reach 2,000 runs.

But Trevor Jesty of Hampshire tore the Warwickshire attack, including England's captain and outstanding fast bowler, Bob Willis, to shreds. He made a century, including 18 fours, in 64 minutes — the second fastest century of the season. Ian Botham took 52 minutes for the fastest of all.

Jesty, who has scored eight belligerent centuries this season, was apparently thumbing his nose at Willis and the English selectors, who omitted him from the team to tour Australia.

Only two ways

DOVER (AP). — A veteran channel swimmer abandoned her bid yesterday to become the first woman to complete a three-way crossing of the English Channel after 24 hours, because she kept falling asleep, the Channel Swimming Association said.

Cindy Nicholas, a 25-year-old Canadian law student, was pulled from the water about eight kilometres off the coast of England on the third leg of her swim, association secretary Audrey Scott announced.

Human face of medicine

By LIORA MORIEL / Jerusalem Post Reporter

ESTABLISHED eight years ago under the visionary guidance of Dr. Moshe Prywes, Ben-Gurion University's Centre for Health Sciences is dedicated to turning out a different kind of physician, one interested in comprehensive medicine.

The centre educates physicians "whose initial interest in comprehensive medicine has been systematically reinforced by encouragement and appropriate training," says Prywes.

"Those who become specialists at least will have had experience in comprehensive medicine and, as a result, should become better consultants to primary care physicians, thus contributing to better cooperation and understanding between specialist and practitioners."

To anyone who has ever waited for hours to be examined by a Kupat Holim doctor, only to be given a perfunctory examination and a prescription for antibiotics, this sounds like an unrealistic dream.

But if anyone can do it, Prywes can make the dream come true. For 22 years, after arriving here from France in 1951, he was the permanent associate dean of the Hebrew University Hadassah Medical School in Jerusalem. While in this post, he became disenchanted by the selection and training of the nation's future doctors. Academic criteria steadily rose, while the number of applicants fell; the school's approach was more intellectual than human. However, the system proved itself capable of withstanding change from within.

"If you take 1,000 people who're sick," says Prywes, "700 will turn to doctors, 300 will not — they will either treat themselves or go to a pharmacy. Of the 700, perhaps 200 will need hospitalization of short or long duration; and of the 200, 10 might need to be hospitalized in a university hospital.

"Here we have built three medical schools and all the doctors we train treat only a very small percentage of the sick. All these doctors have been trained for the horizontal care of patients; they saw the case in the bed, from the moment he entered till he left. Then they saw nothing. They never saw the patient outside the institution, with his family."

For Prywes, treating a patient as a "case" is little more than an intellectual exercise. "If a heart patient is released from hospital without the doctor's seeing to it that the social worker will change his apartment from the fourth to the first floor — nothing has been done."

BEARING there factors in mind, Prywes undertook a new venture in an area of special need: the Negev. Here, 400,000 Jews from all over the world and nearly 40,000 Beduin inhabit an area that comprises roughly 60 per cent of Israel's land mass.

Three hospitals service the area, one each in Ashkelon, Beersheba and Eilat. For many people, this means that they are a long drive away from specialized medical facilities. To exacerbate the situation, most of the primary care units — the public-health clinics — are under staffed and poorly equipped.

Another problem is that two agencies — Kupat Holim and the Ministry of Health — provide health care in the Negev, the rest of Israel, and they don't always work in harmony. There is also some overlapping, without a clear demarcation of responsibilities — and the patient is the one who suffers.

The confusion in the Negev about which institution is responsible to whom and for what has not been settled. "We are bringing about an improvement of health care in these institutions," says Prywes. "But the clinics are part of the national Kupat Holim, with its political, social and professional system, for which it will fight. Then there's the Ministry of Health in Jerusalem, also national, and also with its own system — political, social, professional.

"These two systems don't cooperate, to say the least, so there are repercussions. Whatever I want to change in Kupat Holim's system in the Negev — either in the clinics or in a hospital — must be approved by Kupat Holim headquarters in Tel Aviv. Whatever I want to change in the Ministry of Health must be approved by Jerusalem. This is a Catch-22 situation. If something happens between Kupat Holim and the Ministry of Health in Haifa, and they quarrel, I feel the repercussions in Beersheba."

TO IMPROVE the quality of health care in the region, it is not enough simply to establish another medical school, no matter how good it may be. There must be a two-pronged attack to train superior physicians and at the same time unify and improve general health services.

'We teach students not only to touch, but to feel; not only to look, but to see; not only to hear, but to listen.'

Prywes set out to do just that in 1974. The situation he faced was not promising. In the 1970s, there were over 2,000 locally-rained physicians, only 17 of which worked as GPs. The 1980 figures show that 80 per cent of Israel's medical-school graduates stay and work here. This means that new immigrants cannot get a job at the hospitals, and must work as Kupat Holim doctors. The result is that ambulatory work has become second-rate.

"The doctors were in these public clinics against their will," explained Prywes. "The good posts were all filled by Israelis, and olim were sent to development towns. They spoke Yiddish, Spanish, Russian — but not Hebrew, the language of those they were to treat. Nobody understood them. They had no access to the hospitals. They deteriorated professionally and were isolated. So I came and said that we must educate a different generation."

Prywes realized from the start that the bureaucracy could undermine his best efforts at education. He set out to "merge medical education and medical care," and insisted on being in charge not only of the medical school, but also of the regional Kupat Holim and Ministry of Health facilities.

"You can't educate a doctor for something if that something is not under your control," Prywes asserts. "Medical education is not an aim in itself. It is a mission-oriented endeavour that can be judged by its contribution to society, predominantly by improving the nation's health and by developing new models of medical care."

THE FIRST move was to make Dr. Prywes not only dean of the newly created Faculty of Health Sciences at Ben-Gurion University, but also regional director of all the health services in the Negev.

Because the new medical school was set up to turn out a new kind of medical person, the usual criteria for admission and the curriculum were modified.

Fifty students are accepted annually to the school. Of these, 10 are in the atudah or academic reserves (they study first and do their army service later); the rest should have completed their military service.

The candidate must of course show academic aptitude, but it is not important if he got his high grades in mathematics or in literature.

A non-verbal intelligence test follows, and about two-thirds of those who take it go on to the next stage, the personal interview.

The interview is designed to evaluate how many of the 16 personal, moral and intellectual qualities required by the school are possessed by the candidate. Among the necessary attributes are intellectual curiosity, a willingness to assume responsibility for helping people in distress, and personal integrity.

I asked Prywes whether some students took advantage of the less rigid requirements of the Beersheba school, seeing that other schools would perhaps reject them. He assured me that "the same people apply to all medical schools in Israel. They mark which school they want; we mark the 40 we want — and 20 more in case they choose another school. After admission, if we look at their grades, only three or four have grades under 8, and another three in the 20. So they want to come here, and 90 per cent of them have good grades. Our standards are at least as good as those of other schools. You can be both scientific-minded and human-minded."

Discussing the new curriculum he devised for the new doctor, Prywes said that it is based on "continuous exposure to the problem of health and disease." The student meets living patients, rather than cadavers, from the first week of study. He also learns basic and behavioural sciences, of course, but everything is geared to relevance; the curriculum is patient-oriented.

"We teach students to listen. Not only to touch, but to feel; not only to look, but to see; not only to hear, but to listen. This is a great part of medicine. Instead of 'paying attention' we 'put heart'; it's not by chance that this is the Hebrew way of saying it — sim lev."

STUDENTS work in the community from the start. Some meet people they may never otherwise encounter. For example: a first-year student of Moroccan origin was assigned a 75-year-old central European woman as "his" patient at an old-age home. Trained to notice things, he saw the number on her arm. He asked her why she had scribbled a phone number on her forearm. The young man was very moved by her story and kept returning to hear more. This, too, was part of his education.

Because conpetition between students is not emphasized, there is little incentive to cheat. In fact, the students have established a tradition of not cheating in exams.

The faculty's library is in a building shaped like a geodesic dome. The space is intelligently divided into units to accommodate 80 people without making anyone feel crowded. The ground floor is equipped with medical and scientific journals, while the upper floor is filled with books. The library is dedicated to the memory of Rafi, Prywes's wife's son from her first marriage. (Raquella Prywes is a personality in her own right, and has recently had a best-seller written about her.)

The Beersheba school has already turned out one group of 30 doctors, with another group scheduled to graduate later this year. Of the 30, 18 work in family medicine (15 in the Negev, three elsewhere) and 12 are continuing their studies. The graduates are encouraged to keep in touch. Says Prywes: "They have a straight and direct approach to the hospital — they are only a phone call away."

The Beersheba experiment is wholeheartedly supported by the World Health Organization and is part of the Association for Medical Education in Europe. Dr. Prywes is on the executive committee of that 40-school network, which has representatives from England, Mexico, Holland, the Sudan, Cuba, and, most recently, Egypt. A school based on the Beersheba model opened this year in Ismailiya (the fact that it had only 50 students immediately set it apart from Egypt's other — overcrowded — medical schools).

Prywes believes that once the dedication and zeal of the Beersheba graduates become better known, gifted physicians will choose to practise in areas now deemed undesirable. "Many of us deplore that community medicine is still considered a 'step-child,'" he says. "We are trying to demonstrate that it may become the 'first-born' of a marriage between medical education and medical care."

Internal conflict

By GIDEON RACHMAN/Special to the Jerusalem Post

WITH SO many political arguments going on about the war in Lebanon, it is easy to neglect other aspects of the problem. Professor Charles Greenbaum of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, a specialist in social and military psychology, believes that the psychological viewpoint is crucial to an understanding of the war and to hope for future peace.

In a talk to the Jerusalem Rotary Club and in subsequent conversations with The Jerusalem Post he outlined his thesis. Inevitably it is replete with political implications, but Professor Greenbaum believes that although much of what he says may be politically unacceptable to some, "from a psychological point of view it is fairly indisputable."

He defines the psychological problem of the war for Israelis in terms of "Four C's" — Conflict, Conscience, Conquest and Confusion.

The war, he believes, "has left us in a state of conflict, both as a nation and as individuals."

Unusual for Israel, it is a war in which a substantial minority do not believe. This, for many, causes a battle with the conscience — and confusion in the midst of conquest.

Israel is divided, yet her soldiers, many of whom share civilian doubts about the morality and efficacy of the war, continue to do their duty. "But inevitably," says Dr. Greenbaum, "there is a psychic price."

Greenbaum cited cases of soldiers he had encountered while working as a military psychologist attached to the IDF. One infantryman was an immigrant from South America, where he had been active in underground movements.

This man confided that he found it increasingly difficult to go out on patrols in Southern Lebanon because he could not avoid drawing parallels between the PLO's campaign and the struggles he had undergone in South America. Nevertheless, he continued to do his military duty, because he could not endanger his comrades.

While psychological problems for soldiers and Israeli civilians exist now, they are to some extent assuaged by the fact that Israel has been demonstrably successful in the campaign in the Lebanon. But Dr. Greenbaum anticipates an intensification of these problems, if and when Israel decides to stay in Lebanon for a protracted period.

Greenbaum fears that for the soldiers in the Lebanon, psychological conflicts will intensify when the situation is less obviously urgent and less clearly defined.

With the problems of curfew and restrictions interfering with ordinary life that are inevitable during military occupation, the IDF's relation with the civilian population of Lebanon will be likely to deteriorate. In this situation, many Israeli soldiers will be more likely to feel increasingly uncomfortable about being embroiled in internal Lebanese disputes. This, particularly, since they just might find themselves involved in the paradoxical situation of having to defend the now defenceless, Palestinian civilian refugees from the Christian Lebanese population.

The situation, Greenbaum suggests, would be in some ways parallel to that of the Americans in Vietnam — both in the conflicts experienced by soldiers serving there and the reaction of the public back home.

With the difference, of course, that Lebanon is next door to Israel and not thousands of miles away.

Rotem denies half-year losses, expects to break even

Zim expands despite world recession

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — An addition to the Zim fleet — the 14,000-ton container vessel Zim Singapore — is due to enter service today. Built at the Schichau shipyard in Bremen, West Germany, the ship has a 24-man crew under Captain Nathan Lang. It will make its maiden voyage via Rotterdam and Antwerpen before arriving at Ashdod sometime next month.

Zim managing director Yehuda Rotem told reporters yesterday that the ultra-modern vessel, which can carry 700 containers, was part of the company's programme to expand its fleet — despite the recession in world shipping. He added that a sister ship for the Zim Singapore had been commissioned and was expected to enter service next March. Both vessels will operate out of Eilat.

In addition the company, in partnership with another firm, Ofer Brothers, has also bought two pallet ships, costing $2 million each, which will be used for cargoes of citrus. The vessels are the first of their kind to be used by the company. They are expected to be in operation soon.

Rotem said the company was also planning to replace its four bulk carriers with more modern ships, as well as changing three or four container vessels which are currently plying routes in the Mediterranean. The firm has also ordered two new coal carrying ships which are due for delivery next year.

He revealed that in the past four years Zim had acquired 11 new ships at a total cost of around $200m.

Rotem admitted that like all shipping companies, Zim had been affected by the recession. But unlike other lines, it had managed to stave off the worst effects by improvements and cost-cutting measures. These included painting the underside of ships with a new paint which improves sailing efficiency and fuel costs. The company has also reduced the number of ships it charters by amalgamating some routes.

Rotem denied rumours that Zim's balance sheet for the first half of this year would show a substantial loss. On the details currently available, he said, it appears that the company will break even.

The Israel Shipyards recently completed this floating drydock, which can accommodate vessels of up to 20,000 tons. The dock is anchored off the new eastern quay in Haifa port. (Israel Sun)

Rush is on to unload gold coins as prices soar

LONDON (AP). — Small-time investors are rushing to unload gold coins while the price of bullion glitters from a surge of almost $200 in just two months. But according to gold dealers, others — including many big traders — are holding out for even better prices.

"The small investor is seeing a smashing profit and deciding to pull out," said Howard Verrier, dealing manager for National Westminster Bank. "And who can blame him?"

But the prevailing sentiment among London dealers and analysts is that the gold boom is just beginning — and small investors are also jumping into the market hoping for higher prices.

In June, gold was selling for only $296.75 an ounce. But the weaker dollar, falling interest rates, the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and fears over international financial crises in Mexico and elsewhere have added glitter to gold's prices, which briefly topped $500 last week.

Coin dealers have reported heavy buying and selling of South African Krugerrands, the most common gold coin sold in Britain.

"So many people have bought Krugerrands since 1981 and seen the price of gold go down, that they want their profits," said one dealer noting that profits today could be well over 50 per cent.

At National Westminster, Verrier said the volume of business in gold coins had gone from next to nothing to "an eight-fold increase" with the booming gold prices.

He said, "there are invariably more sellers to the bank than buyers," especially since last April, when the British government imposed a 15 per cent value-added tax on gold coin sales.

Yamani warns of possible oil shortage

VIENNA (Reuter). — Saudi Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani predicts that the world oil glut will not last and has warned consumers they could cause a shortage if they force prices down, the OPEC news agency (OPECNA) said yesterday.

Yamani reaffirmed Saudi Arabia's determination to maintain the reference price of OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) at $34 for a barrel of Saudi crude, the agency said.

It said Yamani's comments on the current surplus-laden market were made to a private, OPEC-sponsored energy seminar held in Oxford, England, last Friday.

Market analysts note that some of OPEC's 13 members have sold at below madated prices in the present glut. Saudi Arabia, which has maintained the $34 price, has seen its output fall from 10 million barrels daily in 1981 to under 5.5 million.

Sunfrost reports rise in exports of 33 per cent

TEL AVIV. — Sunfrost reports that in July it exported more than 1,000 tons of frozen vegetables — a record for the company. Shipments already made, together with orders on hand, indicate that this year exports will be about one third above last year's level.

Sunfrost's marketing manager said that although domestic sales have increased, the share of exports has grown and is now, for the first time, more than 50 per cent of all sales.

Exports to Lebanon doubled to $8 million last month

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — Israel is enjoying a trade boom with Lebanon — even though the traffic is virtually all one-way. Exports to Lebanon reached the $8 million mark last month, nearly double the July figure, and there are high hopes that the present trend will continue, a spokesman for the Industry and Trade Ministry said here yesterday.

Products exported to Lebanon in August ranged from fruit, vegetables and other food stuffs, to textiles and industrial goods, the spokesman said. About 90 per cent of the goods were grown or produced here.

The trade boom follows a visit here last month by a delegation of 26 Lebanese businessmen. During a stop-over in Haifa they were hosted by members of the Chamber of Commerce, the management of Haifa port and ministry officials. The Lebanese were offered the use of facilities at the port, at reduced fees, for the trans-shipment of goods to Lebanon, but they have so far not taken up the deal. However a Zim spokesman yesterday revealed that the company was in the process of bringing in between 15 and 20 containers destined for Lebanon.

Arie Mehulal, director of the Haifa Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said Lebanese businessmen were now a daily sight at offices and factories both here and in Tel Aviv. He said that some of the merchants were currently negotiating with local manufacturers for the purchase of electrical goods for use in the building industry, as well as washing machines, airconditioners and consumer items, like television sets.

"The Lebanese are excellent businessmen, who purchase only goods of the highest quality at the cheapest prices," he said. The present situation was quite good, but a lot would depend on how the political situation in Lebanon develops he added. The Lebanese were only interested in buying at the moment and he was not aware of any Israeli businessmen importing goods from Lebanon.

Lebanese visitors

TEL AVIV (Itim). — 250 Lebanese businessmen and agriculturists arrived here on Monday to visit the kibbutz industries fair now being held.

Dan Hotels had record IS53m. profit

Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Dan Hotels Co., whose shares were only recently registered on the stock exchange here, has reported record profits of IS53 million. The consolidated balance sheet ending on February 28, 1982 covers a period of 16 months, including two winter seasons.

The balance sheet stood at IS698.2m., compared with IS71.6m. in the previous period. This sharp gain in balance sheet size is attributed to the revaluation of the concern's total real estate holdings. As of February 15, 1982, these assets stood at IS500m.

Total income for the period of the report was IS390.7m. compared with IS118.5m. for the previous period.

In June the company raised IS399m. as the result of its first time public financing issue.

Franc cowers before German mark

PARIS (Reuter). — The franc fell to its lowest level ever against the West German mark yesterday as concern grew about the outlook for the French economy, foreign exchange dealers said.

At the official fixing session here, the franc fell to 2.8325 to the mark, its weakest level since the introduction of the new franc in 1958, compared with Monday's 2.8294.

However, the slight easing of the dollar against most major currencies yesterday helped lift the franc to a fix of 7.1145 against the U.S. currency from its record low of 7.1340 on Monday.

The strength of the dollar, which two years ago was worth little more than four francs, is putting increasing strain on France's balance of payments, because around 40 per cent of the country's imports are priced in dollars.

France had a record trade deficit of F3.28 billion francs ($1.8b.) in June and some economists have predicted a continuing deficit of about 10b. francs ($1.4b.) per month next year.

But the franc's weakness against the mark, the currency of its main trading partner, is more worrying for the government politically, since the two currencies are linked in the European Monetary System (EMS), which sets strict fluctuation limits for its eight member currencies.

A decline of the franc to its EMS floor could force the government to devalue the currency within the EMS or withdraw from the system, the dealers said.

U.S. firms to pay for boycott violations

WASHINGTON (Reuter). — Nine American companies have agreed to pay civil penalties toalling $77,000 for alleged violations of anti-boycott provisions of U.S. export laws, the Commerce Department announced last week.

The companies agreed to pay the penalties without admitting or denying the allegations, most of them involving the Arab boycott against Israel.

The largest penalties were $19,000 against Yurata Corp. of New Jersey, $16,000 against Baroid division of NL Industries, Inc. of Houston, and $10,000 against the Kuljian Corp. of Philadelphia.

Israel Corp. debuts successfully

Tel Aviv Stock Exchange

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

TEL AVIV. — The securities of the Israel Corporation (I.C.) debuted successfully yesterday as the A shares were up by 35 per cent and the B shares were ahead by 20 per cent. Total demand for the new issue was nearly IS10m. The smooth entry into the marketplace by I.C. overshadowed a splendid performance by the American-Israeli Paper Mills, whose ordinary shares were up by about 50 per cent this month.

The market as a whole again put in a strong performance, as 28 securities were "buyers only," while 45 were ahead by margins of five per cent or better. Only six "sellers only" situations were registered, while 27 securities were down by five per cent or more.

The new issue market continued to attract interest. Spectronix was again "buyers only." The shares of the North America Bank also were "buyers only" for the second session. Meshulam Levinstein debuted yesterday and as a result of "buyers only" was put up by 20 per cent, without any trading taking place. Newcomer Yitzhar was also "buyers only," but was only five per cent higher. Galil Technologies announced a minute one per cent allocation for its new issue.

Trading turnovers totalled just under IS690m.

The index-linked bond market turned higher, with gains of up to one per cent. Trading was quiet, with turnovers of IS87m.

The shekel shrugged off its recent bout of devaluation and tacked on 6 agorot against the dollar.

Commercial bank shares were up moderately. Surprisingly enough, the shares of Hapoalim were only 0.6 per cent higher. Two days ago the bank unveiled a sparkling midyear report.

Insurance issues were firmly ahead. Phoenix 0.5 gained more than 9 per cent.

Lighterage 0.5, was a standout in the service group with a 2,000-point gain.

HLB Real Estate, among land development and real estate stocks, was clipped for a 10 per cent loss. These shares have recently enjoyed a sharp runup. Others in the sector trended somewhat higher.

Industrials were volatile and on the upside. Alliance, in spite of continuously poor financial results, was up by 9.5 per cent. Dubek (r), perhaps reacting to a rise in the price of cigarettes, was up by 10 per cent. The Polgat shares were 10 per cent higher. Pecker Steel was almost a 10 per cent winner.

The registration books closed yesterday for the new Pama issue. It has all the earmarks of a success. The registered for trading Pama shares were 10 per cent winners, at 683. Piryon was 35 points higher on the day, taking into account a 15-point rise in the continuous trading session, in the morning.

The new issue market continues to blossom as announcements reach the exchange every day. Data Automation has filed for approval of a IS30m. issue. The last computer issue, Nikuv, has had one of the best performances on the exchange. Sunfrost, the producers of frozen foods, will try to raise some IS165m. in a first-time financing issue soon.

Despite predictions to the contrary, the spate of new issues is being absorbed in admirable fashion by a public which apparently is prepared to put up money for any new equity.

New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK. — The stock market closed higher yesterday in heavy trading, but some blue chip issues gave up part of their gains.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose a little over four points to the 923 level. It had been up about 10 points during the session.

About 1,080 issues rose and 475 fell. Volume totalled almost 84 million shares, up from Monday's total of 59,520,000 shares.

Unholy meeting

THE POPE'S projected meeting with the Chairman of the PLO, Yasser Arafat, at the Vatican today will be a severe blow to Israel, and there is no point minimizing it.

Granted, the Pope doesn't have any divisions, but he has unique moral stature and he can dispense or withhold a moral legitimation which has validity in the eyes of millions around the world. It is precisely such legitimation that Arafat craves, and that he will obtain if the audience takes place as planned.

Nor is the Vatican's claim that the meeting will be of purely "humanitarian" significance entirely disingenuous. The Pope has no temporal power, but he has temporal influence. He will become — if Kreisky and Papandreou are omitted as special cases — the first Western leader to receive Arafat. Others who have long been reluctant to do so despite Arab pressures will now find those pressures redoubled in the wake of the Pope's decision.

Their reluctance, after all, stems from what are essentially moral, not expedient, considerations. But if the Pope, a primary arbiter of morality, endows the terrorist chief with an implicit moral endorsement, why should mere temporal politicians still resort to moral arguments to refuse to meet with Arafat?

Surely there are other ways in which the Pope could give expression to his sincere sympathy with the sufferings of the Palestinians, sufferings that have indeed been exacerbated during the recent weeks of war?

There is bitter symbolism in the fact that Pope John Paul II, himself a victim of terrorist assault, should receive the world's foremost architect of terror just ten years to the week after the Munich Massacre, which Yasser Arafat directly and personally planned.

There is ample evidence from a decade of terror trials in Italy that links the PLO to indigenous Italian terrorist groups. Red Brigade members actually received their training at PLO camps in Lebanon.

The Holy See must be aware, moreover — even though it did not show much overt awareness — of the PLO's record towards Lebanon's Christians during the long years of civil war. Yasser Arafat bears direct responsibility for actions of slaughter and bestiality per*petrated during those years.*

The ongoing, and by now entirely incongruous, anachronistic, and unjustifiable discrimination exercised by the Vatican against Israel by its non-recognition of the Jewish State ought to have been another consideration weighing against this precendent-setting session between the Pope and Arafat.

On the inter-denominational plane, too, years of painstaking progress towards Jewish-Catholic conciliation will now inevitably suffer. There is worldwide Jewish outrage at the imminent meeting. It cuts across differences that exist over Israel's Palestinian policy or the war in Lebanon.

Nor is the criticism confined to Jews and Israelis. Leading newspapers in several countries, many of them severely critical of Israel and Mr. Begin, have strongly deplored the Pope's intention to receive Arafat.

The "long reckoning" between the Jews and the Catholic Church, and the controversy over the Church's role during the Holocaust, are additional reasons why the Curia should have thought twice and thrice before inviting Arafat.

But they are not the main or the relevant reasons, nor should they be made the focus of Israel's case. There are distressing signs, however, that Prime Minister Begin is planning once again to invoke the Six Million thus demeaning their memory and demeaning himself in a vociferous argument with a major world figure.

This line of polemics conveniently blurs the uncomfortable causal relationship between the war in Lebanon and Arafat's long-sought political and public-relations ploy in Rome today.

Mr. Begin's first salvo on Sunday, delivered anonymously by a senior official, drew a sharp and immediate response from the Vatican. To press the point would only run the risk of arousing Catholic hostility around the world on an issue which is disputed by historians and not germane to the matter at hand.

Israel's case against Arafat can be argued on its merits — there is no need for polemics or Hitler.

As for the Pope himself, his personal record during the Second World War and in peace is a noble tale. He witnessed Jewish suffering and has shown in the past that he understood what he saw. Presumably the initiative to invite Arafat was not his own but rather that of Curia diplomats, though he, of course, bears the responsibility.

It is not too late for him, even today, to reconsider.

POSTSCRIPTS

A PAINTING carrying the signature of Adolf Hitler is gathering dust and huge storage fees at Zurich's international airport as authorities hunt for its vanished owner.

The picture, with an estimated value of 950,000 Swiss Francs (IS1.1 million) was deposited in an airport warehouse eight years ago by a Frenchman giving his name as Marcel Boucher.

But Boucher has since disap*peared,and officials say it will cost* him 45,000 Swiss Francs (IS535,000) in unpaid storage fees to reclaim the work. Advertisements placed in Swiss and French newspapers and inquiries through the Swiss embassy in Paris have so far failed to lure him back.

The painting, which depicts a mountain landscape in picture-postcard style and is marked "A. Hitler, 17.7.36," was apparently painted at Hitler's mountain villa.

If the owner does not reappear and pay up, it will be auctioned off, an official at the airport storage firm said.

THE WHITE marble quarries of Carrara, active since Roman times, are barely feeling the pinch of the world recession, thanks to continuing strong demand from a discriminating clientele.

"There is no talk of crisis here. We're still doing well," white marble wholesaler Alessandro Bernardi says.

About 760,000 tonnes of marble, almost all quarried locally, were shipped abroad from the nearby local marble port last year — some 30,000 tonnes more than the exports in 1980.

Small amounts of the highest quality white stone, in which Michelangelo sculpted his "Pieta" and the imposing figures of Moses and David, are kept for the Renaissance artist's modern successors. Britain's Sir Henry Moore is one.

Michelangelo's quarry is still there, now just a geometrical gash in the mountains and one of the many quarries worked by huge heavy machinery which is gradually eating its way into the towering white rock faces.

A brief drive inland from the Mediterranean beaches south of Genoa leads through medieval Carrara. From there, a twisting road winds its way up into the white-scarred mountains which have determined so much of the town's history.

STOPPING SHORT OF DREAMLAND

By DAVID KRIVINE

THE AIM of the people of Israel from the beginning has been to achieve a secure peace; peace not from a position of weakness (the 1949 borders) but from a position of strength; peace behind safe and defensible borders.

The opportunity has come at last. Prime Minister Menachem Begin made it possible. His policy during the last five years, starting with the Egyptian peace treaty and ending with the expulsion of the PLO from Beirut, has transformed this country from a minor power to a major power in the Middle East.

Begin has given Israel its position of strength; but like many other men of action in history, he is dragged on by the momentum of his own triumphs and does not know where to stop. He has provided the state at long last with the means to make peace, but he is fluffing the achievement of that objective.

President Ronald Reagan's proposal for settling the Palestinian problem is not a setback for Israel's policies; on the contrary, it offers a unique chance of fulfilling them. Begin's rhetoric has confused the issue. His declaration that Israel will not give up its control over any part of Eretz Yisrael (that is, of Palestine) until the end of days flatly contradicts everything that Israel's past leaders have said and done since the country's foundation.

It represents the programme of Herut, but not the programme of Herut's partners, neither the Liberals, nor the NRP, nor Agudat Yisrael. Nor has it been the stated policy of the cabinet coalition in its negotiations with the outside world so far.

The text of the Camp David agreement is studiously imprecise. It can accommodate Reagan's interpretation just as easily as Begin's. It certainly does not give carte blanche to the Greater Israel design.

FOREIGN MINISTER Yitzhak Shamir told the Knesset last Wednesday that if Reagan's plan of territorial compromise had been implicit in the Camp David paper, Israel would never have signed it. It can be answered that if Begin's version of permanent Israeli sovereignty over all Palestine had been implicit in that paper, the Egyptians and the Americans would not have signed it.

What does the Camp David protocol say? "The population of the Middle East yearns for peace." More specifically, a committee is to be set up for negotiating a settlement with Jordan.

How is that to be achieved? After a period of transitional arrangements, "negotiations will take place to determine [in a later section the phrase "to agree" is used the final status of the West Bank and Gaza and its relationship with its neighbours." The document specifies: "The negotiations will resolve, among other things, the location of the boundaries."

Two things can be said: Firstly, if the final status is to be negotiated, the solution must have some chance of being acceptable to the Arabs. Secondly, *if frontiers are to be in*cluded in the negotiations, there has to be a measure of give-and-take over that topic as well.

Evidently the two sides are entitled to their own opinion as to how the negotiations will work out. But they must not announce prematurely what those results are going to be. In making such an announcement, Begin has pre-empted the outcome.

He can justify his indiscretion by blaming the Americans. They ought not to have any opinion at all, being an intermediary. If they do have an opinion, they should not blurt it out. Since they have done that, Israel had no option but to state its case.

Quite so. But what is the upshot? The upshot is that there is no longer anything to negotiate about. Begin had made it clear all along that he would not allow the West Bank and Gaza to be Judenfrei. But he had hinted at possible forms of compromise: a condominium, a confederation with Jordan.

Now he has stated bluntly that whatever happens, Israel is going to be sovereign over these disputed lands forever. The wheel has come full circle. To modify a well-known aphorism by Henry Ford, the Arabs can fix any frontier they like for the Jewish state, as long as it is the historic frontier of Mandatory Palestine.

Yet some shifting of boundaries is imperative. Israel has always been prepared, painful though this is, to give up a part of Eretz Yisrael. The world's recognition that the Jews have a claim to Palestine must be matched by an Israeli recognition that the Arabs have a claim, too. That claim must be given at least a token territorial expression, otherwise peace will never be forthcoming.

Reagan's recommendations are thankfully not the extremist decisions of last week's summit in Fez. Despite some oversights, with which Israel will have to take issue (notably concerning Jerusalem), the U.S. president has gone a long way to meet our requirements, which, it should be noted, have hardened with the passage of time.

In 1947, we were prepared to stomach the UN Partition Plan. After the War of Independence, we latched on to the more generous 1949 borders. Then came the Six Day War, after which Israel would not consider either the 1947 or the 1949 borders, but conceived the Allon Plan.

Came the Lebanese war, and Begin now accepts neither the 1947 line nor the 1949 border nor the Allon Plan. He demands the borders of all Palestine. (To his credit he did not take more, but gave up the whole of Sinai including Yamit.) He expects the Arabs of Palestine and Jordan to go along with that.

THEY WILL NOT. Begin's heroics have come off remarkably well up to now, but we cannot follow him into dreamland. We must retain at least some of the unfanatic commonsense which, be it said, has been the province of the socialist leadership since Zionist politics began.

Peace must be bought, it cannot be achieved for nothing. What Begin offers boils down to: personal autonomy for the Arabs in a territory under Israeli sovereignty and dotted with Israeli settlements. Some people consider this to be a good solution, but nobody can seriously believe it will satisfy the Arabs.

The Likud autonomy plan, whatever its merits, is not negotiable. The Begin-Shamir-Sharon policy represents a cul-de-sac; it leads nowhere. The prospect ahead is continued stalemate.

The Likud have exhausted their creative energies during their five years in office. The time has come for a change of government, which the early elections under consideration could make possible. Labour must be brought back to power. What's necessary now is their intellectualism and flexibility. The situation demands fresh ideas, new leadership, an innovative approach.

Is the effort worth making? Can the Allon Plan be any more acceptable to Jordan and the Arab states behind it than Begin's autonomy proposals? Reagan invites us to make the attempt. If we comply there are two possible results: either Jordan will make peace with Israel or it will not.

It it does, we are out of the woods. A Jewish state with defensible borders at peace with the Arabs — this would be an outcome that few expected to see in their lifetime.

If Jordan refuses to make peace with Israel, even on Reagan's terms, then the situation stays the same as it is now. Israel's possession of the West Bank and Gaza will remain unchanged — with this qualification: Israel will be on the side of the angels.

We will have lost nothing, save the world's hostility. We will have kept open the door to continued negotiation. We will have retained the friendship of the U.S. — the only country that has stood by our side steadfastly throughout.

That alone is a bounty worth holding on to.

Dry Bones

READERS' LETTERS

REAGAN'S PLAN

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — President Reagan's speech to the American people about the Middle East ignores realities.

1. Was it not Israel's military might that forced the PLO out of Beirut? Was it not Israel's magnanimity in ceding the Sinai to Egypt that proved how highly she valued peace?

2. If Reagan should succeed in his programme, will 100 million Arabs suddenly forget their hatred of Israel? Will more than three-fourths of the world's nations, large and small, extend the hand of friendship to Israel? Will the Lebanese sign a formal peace treaty with Israel and lose millions of Arab customers?

3. Should the Palestinian problem be solved, would that stop the Iran-Iraq war, make Syria and Iraq good neighbours, lessen the Saudi fears of Moslem fundamen*talists, solve the Kurdish problem,* and make the Middle East free from future conflicts among the volatile Arabs? "A just and lasting peace in the Middle East" indeed!

4. If the West Bank and Gaza were turned over to their one million plus crowded inhabitants, would they make room for another million Palestinian refugees?

SHEIKH EL-HUZEIL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I refer to your report of September 9 about the death of Sheikh el-Huzeil.

The Sheikh, a good acquaintance of mine since 1942, was much younger than you report. According to his own words, he was not yet married when he met the first British soldiers after the fall of Beersheba in 1917. According to Bedouin custom, he would then have been about 17, surely not more than 20.

We arrive at the same result if we take as starting point the so-called Year of Return, a year of drought, according to the former District Officer of Beersheba, the late Aaref el-Aaref — the year 1911. The woman of the tribe, officiating in the rite Mother of Rain, was not yet married then but nubile. She was, according to different reliable sources, about one year the Sheikh's senior.

Accordingly, the Sheikh would have been about 85 at the time of his death — not 110.

Furthermore, the Sheikh's name was Salman and not Suleiman.

THANKS TO GEVA

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I would like to thank Colonel Eli Geva for his heroic action in resigning from the Lebanon war.

It renews my faith in the Israeli dream to see men like him emerge to speak his conscience. This, after all, is what the establishment of your nation was all about and why so many of us for so long have championed Israel's cause.

Many Americans would like to give moral support to voices like Geva's, partly because we fear that Israel will lose U.S. support altogether if situations like the pre*sent one should continue.*

RADIO INTERVIEWS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I listen to the English radio programme and am often annoyed and distressed when they present an interview with some personality. This person although sometimes very important, had poor diction and does not possess good grammar and English; he hems and haws and stutters and the stance of his answers is often misunderstood or very difficult to understand.

It seems to me that radio listeners would prefer a clear and distinct presentation of the answers by the radio reporter, as they are more interested in the clarity of the facts than in their original, but inept presentation by interviewee.
